

Financial Literacy Education

A continuing education course intended for K-12 teachers, NDSU Extension Service agents, consumer credit counselors, bankers, 4-H leaders and volunteers who are involved with educating young people about personal financial management.

The course was developed to train teachers and others how to teach financial management classes/lessons. The course will address the best methods for reaching youth. It will cover a variety of resources and materials to assist participants in developing lesson plans as part of the course.

About the course: Course format is completely online and covers four modules with online resources and Web sites that will be used to develop lesson plans for each.

Course dates: The course will run for eight weeks. It begins on June 12 and will conclude by Aug. 4.

Course objectives: By taking the course participants will gain the following benefits:

- ✓ Participants will learn about current research on teen money management behavior, perceptions of money management education, different learning styles and teaching techniques.
- ✓ Participants will become familiar with current money management basics.
- ✓ Participants will become more comfortable and confident teaching about money management.
- ✓ Participants will develop and share four lesson plans.
